Coal.

Sch. Priscilla Smith arrived at this port this morning from New York with a cargo of coal, having discharged her cargo of frozen herring at the latter port.

LARGE HADDOCK SCHOOL.

Provincetown Boat and Dory Fishermen Making Large Catches.

A despatch from Provincetown says the haddock school off that town is one of the largest and best known to those waters in many years. At one buyer's place 20 boats landed 24,000 pounds, the fish selling at three cents per pound, or upward of $700 for the lot, this giving an average of $18 per man to the 40 men on that one flotilla of dories. Not a dory of that one bunch brought in less than 1200 pounds that day, while one or more brought in 2500 pounds. All through the fleet of over 100 dories the catch was big, and succeeding days have given fine hauls. Boats fishing further off shore are the sloops and schooners mainly, some of which are bringing in cod in large quantities. One of the many is the eight-ton sloop Braganza, recently equipped with a gasoline engine, which took 6000 pounds of cod Sunday.

The presence of so fine a school of haddock is likely due to the presence of a horde of sand eels in the vicinity. Sand eels, or sand lance, are the favorite food at this season of the haddock, and hooks baited with that sort of bait do not fail of their object. The cod, on the other hand, do not take kindly to the sand eel bait, so the fishers off west of Wood End are using fresh herring mostly, hauls of that species being caught in harbor weirs, which are early in the field this year.
